New Freighter Every Six Days

Industrial Miracle Enacted By Former Builder of Dams in West.

PORTLAND, ORE.—A 10,000-ton Liberty freighter every six days—that's how fast one shipyard is helping to build our bridge of ships to the war fronts.

For any shipyard in the United States that would be a proud record. For the Oregon Shipbuilding Corporation it's an industrial miracle.

Edgar Kaiser, Oregon Shipbuilding's head man, never thought about building ships until the war in Europe was well under way. He was a builder of dams—Boulder and Grand Coulee. Now he's showing veteran shipbuilders how to apply mass production methods to their industry.

Top Producer.

The first Liberty EC-2 was launched at Oregon shipbuilding last September 27. Recently No. 28 slid into the Willamette river.

What makes the Oregon yard the country's top producer can be told only in part.

Company men say the organizing genius of the boss—they mean Kaiser—is of the major factors in the 30,000 men—most of whom, like himself, never had, worked on a ship—and shipped them into a fireball production unit in less than 12 months.

Most of the workers are family men with a deep-rooted feeling that this is their war. No side lines to bust.

But O. Alexander Mechin, U. S. maritime commission observer, has more reasons.

This yard, he says, is one of the few built from scratch to turn out Liberty freighters, nothing else.

Result: No time and effort wasted compromising construction methods and facilities.

Ahead of Other Yards.

Kaiser's experts have studied the EC-2 from stem to stern for production speed, Mechin says, and have developed pre-assembly to a point unparalleled in other yards.

Comdr. Charles H. Harnett, supervisor of navy shipbuilding in Oregon, the man who awarded Oregon Shipbuilding one of the first three "penalties on the Pacific coast," said: "The Kaiser men came into shipbuilding with a full knowledge of production methods but with little about shipbuilding. They had no preconceived notion about ship construction, no traditions, no prejudices to overcome. They just figured out the fastest way to put them together and did it."

Nitroglycerin Scare.

Puts Policemen in Panic.

LANCASTER, PA. George Franklin, Federal Bureau of Investigation instructor, was explaining the dangers of nitroglycerin to a class of 60 policemen at the FBI civilian defense school here today. "A chief of this," he asserted, "would be enough to blow us all out of the courtroom." Suddenly, Franklin's fingers slipped and the vial fell to the floor.

Chairs overturned, pencils and notebooks were flying. Policemen rushed toward the door. While cops rushed toward the door, Franklin said it was only a stunt—the bottle contained only a harmless fluid that looked like nitroglycerin.

German Money Used to Pay for British Repairs.

LONDON.—German bombs from German planes have damaged houses, offices, shops in London owned by Germans.

And German money has paid for their repairs.

There is plenty of German money in London. One man has all. He is Sir Ernest Pass, custodian of enemy property.

Says the custodian: "I have all the cash. In case there is a German property needing repair, we see to it—with the German money, if there is any. If there isn't, we think again."
